limitations and mistakes, we learn to let Life Force flow through us. We become more alive and our creations become more alive. Feelings coursing through our nervous system are enough reason to go for the experience of connection, but the power of our nature in alignment with the source of creation flowing through our systems is unmistakable. We become more; we sense "home." We set our sights higher.

"We cannot solve our problems with the same thinking we used when we created them."

It is a matter of resonance and reliance on what is true and a consciousness about our choices. After all, once we begin to make conscious choice, there is nothing left but more conscious choice. Not making choice gives us little steerageway, while even poor choice is momentum toward change.

We learn to choose in alignment with Innate Intelligence, vision, resonance, intent and gratitude, and we become more. Ultimately, we are always becoming more. It is as simple as that.

Faster and Faster

As we align with nature's wisdom and success, we realize that we have far more access to naturality and authenticity than we might imagine. As we compare notes, review our surroundings and discover more rhyme and reason to our existence, we are compelled to turn within for additional direction and insight. And of course, the expression, "the last place we look" is uproariously appropriate.

As we discover our capacity for visionary focus and as we accept our capacity for intentionality and responsibility, our worlds change for the better. Though a few middlemen would claim to represent our interests, it is increasingly apparent that staying on top is their survival credo. As we become more aware of the contrast, we come to a clarity about what is important to us.

MOMENTUM

As creators, we have little capacity to blame middlemen for our sorrows. By our consentience, we inadvertently nod in favor of those who would choose for us, foregoing our power and capacity as visionaries for a period of time. As observers, though powerful in our ignorance, we instead condone and create according to someone else's wishes. It is a surprisingly good use of our time, for without this contrast, we would never get clear about what is truly important to us.

We are coming to a point, similar to the new (quantum) physics replacing the old (Newtonian) physics, where a whole new order is becoming available and felt. We are achieving decision-making, choice and consentience in a whole new manner for which alignment with Innate Intelligence is our simple solution. And, of course, we reap the benefits as our world begins to become more! (Maybe "we" are the source of the "new world order"?)

Some of us partner with Innate Intelligence sooner than others in our decision-making ventures and venues. For, after all, in the nature of decision-making, if we don't know all of the variables, how are we ever going to make prudent and quality decisions? If we don't know all of the facts regarding a choice, how can we ever make a right choice and assure ourselves of rightful outcomes and solutions,¹ especially as the world moves faster and faster? Maybe this is why we have deferred to someone else, someone of seeming authority, someone claiming the answers, someone claiming to be smarter than ourselves. Maybe all we need to know is "that of ourselves."²

As rising and sentient beings perched upon a planet that we are about to overload with poor choices coming from poor decision-making skills, we are learning that nature, its success and know-how is becoming increasingly valuable. As a species, we are evolving, and as an aspect of our evolution, we are learning to make better decisions because the results of our thoughts and decisions are forming right in front of our eyes. As our lives move ever faster, it is becoming easier to see the results of our choices, for which we learn to choose once again!

a matter of constantly refining the momentum of our beliefs and knowings with insight from Innate Intelligence. After all, we carry a great deal of baggage that interferes with our capacity for clarity, output and receptivity. Learn to let the Universe parlay our vision into its possibilities and flow through our system as a function of creativity, knowing and living life. Discover something new about ourselves. When we decide how it should look and when it should show up, we lose sight of the possibilities. Instead, go shopping. Not that kind of shopping! Shop among our goals, activities and aspirations and see which ones offer us the most juice. In other words, multitask.

Waging Peace

As we learn to refine our vision and become more responsible for the quality of life we each have within our spheres of influence, we affect and influence the outcome of humanity in a more useful manner. As we become more powerful as individuals and come to know our relationship with Innate Intelligence, we affect the whole in a more useful, holistic (and exponential) manner. And, as we give up unconscious consentience, i.e., silently empowering the middleman through our non-participation, we begin to create change – not only for our children, not only as an influence that can be felt generationally, but also as an influence on the emerging nations of the world. As adolescents and young nations alike, their perspective and growing momentum is representative of what they have learned or not learned thus far. Ultimately, through conscious consentience (mass-mind intentional support) of human rights, justice, democracy, etc., we effectively influence the whole.

As we learn to share what we are becoming, as we learn to give up separation and a belief in man-made superiority and merge into a wholeness with each other, we realize a new world order of our own making. As we come into alignment with Innate Intelligence and a conscious consentience, we silently vote for what is right and our world slowly begins to turn our way – knowing that it can be no other way.

VISIONARIES THRIVE IN ALL TIMES

There is a new world order awaiting our nod as we polish our commitment to newfound responsibility, choice and decision-making. As we align with indwelling Innate Intelligence, as we learn to choose for ourselves outside the influence of the middlemen, we discover how very much alike and how very powerful we are.

On another note, regarding another e-mail that made rounds to thousands and thousands, if not millions, of people in March 2003, there was the suggestion of a prayer vigil for President Bush for a certain date. It was suggested that President Bush had an enormous decision-making load and an enormous amount of anger directed toward him. It was suggested that “we” could be of inestimable help by sending him love on a certain day. This is a very powerful example of conscious consentience and a good use of the power of conscious choice. With a conscious commitment to the issues and problems of the world, aligned with unconditional love and a sophisticated underlying quality of intent, we would see the world come to a new blossoming very quickly.

Vast opportunities await us as we refine our output and consciously choose from among our many possibilities. We discover that, in alignment with nature’s system of success, we can move mountains and we can foster newfound order. And, as we align with the highest possible resources available, all we have to do is choose accordingly. We then discover that our horizons are much broader than we had imagined and our potential is the reason for the distance between the stars.

We know we have achieved visionary focus when our lives become a consistent momentum of refinement and discernment, all of which come from the conscious and deliberate choices we make. We are able to see the quality of the flow events in our lives as rivers of momentum, for which we learn to pick and choose, carefully discerning our choices and what I like to call “just add.”

and potentials. As we discover realities held together by substantially and exponentially more powerful glue, our invisible tendrils more capable influence the whole.

As we invisibly join forces (our momentum) with those whose connection with Innate Intelligence becomes their primary drive, our worlds begin to spin in a different manner, conjuring delicious octaves of corresponding reality. Dr. Hawkins tells us that one individual rating 540 on the Map of Consciousness “neutralizes” and offsets, many hundreds of thousands that are operating at far lower levels. In other words, as we discover our vision, hold our vision and merge our vision with others of like mind and qualities of intent, we enhance a vibration that is substantially and exponentially far more powerful than the volume of those whose allegiance is toward force, raucous output or victimhood.

Although they do not know of the dissonance they create, it is of little matter, as visionaries aligned in refined vibrational output and corresponding realities counter their influence. As the exponential power of our possibilities rise to offset the raucous nature of those forcefully holding sway in world affairs or naively offering unconscious consentience, our world revolves toward its possibilities. This is the divine plan, the second coming and assuredly what we are becoming in our conscious evolution of life on Earth. After all, we are a species powered by free will and our partnership with Innate Intelligence. It is only by the blossoming of the flower within each of us, that the world’s bounty increases. It turns out it is an inside job!

Digital Influence

As we discover our wholeness and our oneness, we become cognizant of new possibilities and outcomes. By way of example, we are becoming digital voters and digital swayers of momentum. As we become connected to each other in the Information Age via computers, the Internet and the communications revolution, and more connected through the bridge that is each our quality of intent, the world begins to shift for the better. In December 2002, a group of Hollywood actors spoke out against the United States war-mongering against Iraq. Their initial message was that it was patriotic and responsible to speak out against U.S. policy that seemed to be at odds with the greater good.

These actors began what has grown into a huge waging peace movement within the U.S.A. and around the world. Hundreds of thousands of individuals across the planet were expressing themselves, and even a U.S. congressman or two. But the general American population had muffled itself into a silent support (silent consentience) for leadership, even though leadership was a bit murky in its interpretation of the issues.

Out of the initial 100 or so actors who signed a statement decreeing that there were better solutions available has come a huge surge of response that is exciting in its possibilities. Several groups, including Hollywood's Win Without War Coalition,³ and MoveOn.org,⁴ created a series of Web sites that initiated the first virtual march on the planet. On February 6, 2003, Washington senators and other top U.S. officials were systematically bombarded with phone calls, faxes and e-mails in opposition to the U.S. war effort. Approximately one million calls and faxes were received by elected officials in one day, and a huge new momentum was initiated. The first virtual march for peace was a meteoric success.

All that was required was to register on a Web site in response to several broadcast e-mails that were in circulation. Registration was quick and easy: your name, your time availability, zip code and a statement if you wished. What came back in a matter of one day was an auto-generated e-mail informing you of the time of your calls and whom to call. Another auto-generated e-mail was sent the day before your call, reminding you of your commitment and the time of your calls, which were spaced four minutes apart.
