

ALLOWING

of acceptance that we begin to turn our lives around, and the world becomes a better place.

Unconscious creating provides us with valuable contrasts (hints) to help us to clarify our focus toward new clarity and newfound awareness. Conscious visioning begins by first revaluing what we resist, thereby bringing us closer to what we prefer in our lives. Initially with baby steps, and with allowing and acceptance at our side, we begin the migration toward greener pastures. Our poorly created and ill-conceived realities fade as we put our time and attention to allowing what we are presently experiencing, while at the same time, visioning toward what we wish for ourselves. By listening to Innate Intelligence, we are guided to refine our vision, creations and outcomes. Out of unconscious creating comes conscious creating. Out of mistaken assumptions come new perceptions, and out of trial and error and contrast we become more intentional, individually and as a species.

Loving Ourselves

According to the mystics, prophets and poets of our past, love is an inside job. The key to unconditional love is to learn to love our creations and to love ourselves and “others” just as they are. But, before we can love “others,” we must learn to love ourselves, i.e., we must learn to respect ourselves. We must also learn to love and trust the process. As lower-octave creators miscreating and missing the mark<sup>5</sup> in sometimes startling fashion, it is hard to have respect for ourselves as we review the emotional carnage, disappointment and confusion we may have left in our trial-and-error experiences. It is enough to make one angry or frustrated!

It is hard to love ourselves when we don't respect ourselves. It is hard to love the world when we see it as dysfunctional, angry and hateful. And, if we can't love our creations and we can't respect who we are, we lose sight of our capacity to love others. As we learn from our struggles, we learn to love others. After all, we are all beginners at this.

Love is a matter of respect for ourselves and each other. As we review our past, we learn that we are all getting our acts together at our own speed and clarity. We are entitled to as many mistakes as it takes to get it right. It is not acceptable to judge others while we are still judging ourselves. When we no longer judge ourselves and instead allow, we develop the capacity to trust each other. This, then, becomes a substantial feather in our cap – and, silently, a feather in their cap.

Interestingly, love is all there is, and love (acceptance) is something we must first apply to ourselves and our creations. Why? Because it is the easiest way to learn to accept the world we live in. As we learn how to turn our lives around and as we learn the mechanics of reality creation, we gain perspective about the world around us. We are all very much the same – though it seems we learn at different speeds. Everything is an act of creation; everything is an act of expansion; everything is an act of brotherhood; and everything is an act of love and understanding. Our creations are little and insignificant and do little real damage. Or we are powered by the forces of God, and nature and Innate Intelligence, and thus, we are more useful to the whole.

We are creators, and we are spewers of life, sometimes better and sometimes not so good – but this is what we do! Only in acceptance of our past do we gain the freedom to choose again and move toward that visionary mode of creating with intentionality and alignment to what is true and what is right. With the simple act of allowing, we begin the pathway of becoming true lovers of life and true lovers of “others.” Otherwise, we are in resistance, and we push against what we perceive as wrong or dangerous. To know the difference is very powerful indeed.
